THE CAMPAIGN IN INDIANA

Prohibitionist Mills and the Tactics He Employs to Humbug Republicans.

A Sad Result of Bringing Church Discipline Into a Political Controversy-Conventions, Meetings and Pole-Raisings.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal NOBLESVILLE, Aug. 25 .- N. E. Mills, of Westfield, who is the Prohibition candidate in this county for Representative, has concluded that the path of a candidate is beset with many delusions, and that political consistency is a jewel of which he is not in possession. When the Republican State committee adopted the local-option plank in their platform it met the approval of the sincere temperance people of this county who have the welfare of the country at heart, and they expressed their satisfaction and intention of voting with the only party through which they hoped to accomplish the good work of temperance reform. Mr. Mills, appreciating the situation, then solicited their votes; in fact, the votes of Republicans generally, upon the pledge that he was all right on the local-option question, and if elected would vote and work for local option. At Arcadia he solicited the vote of a well known Republican, stating that the Republicans had at last done what had wanted them to do for years; they had adopted a local-option platform, and he was satisfied with that; he claimed to have 250 Republican votes pledged to him on the faith of his promise to work for local option, and that he would have 500 by November, and that the Democrats would indorse him as their candidate. The third-party Probibitionists demurred to Mr. Mills's espousal of the cause of local option; then it was that he changed front again, and he now says that he is "opposed to local option, and that nothing but State and national prohibition will suit him." On Saturday, the 18th, Mr. Mills endeavored to induce the Democratic county convention to indorse him se their candidate, but they ignored him, and under the delusion that Mr. Mills would divide the temperance vote and thus reduce the Republican vote, a straight-out Democrat was nominated. The true friends of temperance reform are satisfied with the Republican local opplatform, and will so vo

Another source of trouble for Mr. Mills and his friends is that Brooks, their candidate for Vice-president, made a speech at Westfield, and while addressing himself to the Republicans,

I was raised at Kentucky, and was with the army a. little while; they passed a law that every man who was in sympathy with the Southern Confederacy must take the oath of allegiance. My sympathies were with them, and I did pray that they might whip you off the face of the earth.

The State of Kentucky did not secede, so Brooks did not follow his State into the army, but went from choice, and because, as he says, his sympathies were with them; and nowhere in his speech did he say his sympathies were changed. The people of Hamilton county always were loyal to the stars and stripes, and they will not condone the treasonable utterances of Dr. John A. Brooks, although law-abiding and forbearing enough to accord him a hearing for the great cause which he and his followers assumed to represent. Neither will the people be humbugged by N. E. Mills, who is now an active partner with that man Brooks.

A Question of Church Discipline. special to the Indianapolis Journal.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Aug. 25.-Last evening Rev. E. R. Johnson, a methodist minister, got into a dispute with Dr. J. R. Etter, a Prohibitionist, over what the Methodist Discipline holds in regard to prohibition. Johnson called Etter a liar, and Etter returned the compliment in much stronger terms. Finally Rev. Johnson told Etter than he would give him $25 if he could find what he claimed was in the Methodist Discipline. This morning Dr. Etter was out bright and early, with a copy of the church Discipline, looking for Rev. Johnson, whom he found in the postoffice. Etter stopped him, read the passage and demanded $25. Johnson went on and Etter entered suit against Johnson for the $25. Johnson is a Republican and claims that the following does not forbid him or any person from voting the Republican ticket: We hold that the proper attitude of Christians toward the traffic is one of uncompromising opposition, and while we do not presume to di ctate to our people as to their political affiliations, we do express the opinion that they should not permit themselves to be controlled by party organizations that are managed in the interest of the liquor traffic.—Discipline of 1884, Appendix, page 338.

This is claimed by Etter as forbidding church members voting the Republican ticket, because "it is a party controlled by the liquor traffic." Johnson, on the other hand, claims that the quotation means that each person is to use his own judgment as to the best manner to get prohibition. Presiding Elder Hickman, of the Crawfordsyille district, is one of the prohibition peakers of this county, and talks long and loud. He is the person who gave the Republican party "fits" at the 4th of July meeting at Meharry's grove, this year; who has been sending circulars all over the country about soldiers of the North and South bridging the chasm by joining the Prohibition party; who is reported as having called the editor of the Attica Ledger "a crossroad editor" in the pulpit at Newtown; who, it is claimed, several years ago advocated, in a publie speech, the blotting out of the colored race by intermarriage with the whites.

Randolph County Pole-Raisings. Special to the Indianapolis Journal

WINCHESTER, Aug. 25.-To-day has been quite an enthustastic one among Republicans in this county. For several days it has been the absorbing topic of the county that on to-day Republicans would begin in this city and erect a series of poles along the Richmond and Winchester pike to Lynn, nine miles distant. At an early hour an enthusiastic crowd erected a pole at the woolen factory of John D. Carter, here. As they proceeded southward from place to place, the crowd grew greater and greater until pole No. 14 was reached at the home of Hon. W. A. W. Daly, Republican nominee for Representative from this county, when an immense crowd of regular old-style "russling" Republicans sent up a handsome 150-foot pole with whoop and a hurrah. Here the crowd took dinner and listened to one of the witty and captivating speeches of the Hon. Thedore Shockney, Republican nominee for joint Senator for this and Delaware counties. From here the crowd proceeded to the home of James Price, where the fifteenth and last pole of the series was sent aloft with a right royal will, and the emblem of American liberty and union set flying from its topmost point, proclaiming death to the old bandanna rag. One pole was erected at the home of Ruben Mickens, who has never voted other than a Democratic ticket, but who now declares for Harrison and Morton.

Shelby County Republicans.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal. SHELBYVILLE, Aug. 25.-The Republicans of Shelby county held their convention at the Opera Hall this afternoon, which was yery largely attended. Captain H. S. Byers presided, and on assuming control of the convention delivered a rousing speech. Mr. Elijah Jackson was made secretary. The following ticket was selected: Representative, E. B. Wingate; treasurer, Thomas Moore; sheriff. George Haehl; surveyor, John R. Williams; coronor, Dr. Charles Tindall; commissioners, George W. Kennedy and William Typer. The ticket is one of the strongest ever nominated by the party, and is composed of first-class men. After the ticket was made, Attorney-general Michener was called to the stage, and for half an hour spoke of the State issues and of the candidacy of General Harrison. The address throughout was a masterly effort, and aroused Rapublicans to the highest pitch of enthusiasm. He was followed by Hon. Sid Conger, who made very happy remarks. The Republicans of Shelby county are in splendid trim for the great political fight now on, and are determined to make bardsome gains in November. The contest will be waged in every township from this time on, and the outlook is flattering.

Meetings in Wabash County.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal WABASH, Aug. 26. - The Republican campaign in this section is progressing finely. Meetings are being held in all the small towns and settlements in this and adjoining counties, and the speakers find the people wide awake and enthustic for the protective-tariff system. Las night, at Grange Hall, five miles west of this city, Captain G. W. Swadley and Jesse Parmenter addressed a fine audience, and a Republican club was formed. Hon. Calvin Cowgill had a similar andience at Monkeytown, and several third-party Prohibitionists who heard him decided to vote for Harrison and Morton. The Harrison and Morton Club of Lafontaine, two bundred strong, completed its organization | Bremen, Edam, from less night and elected officers. Hon. B. F. | Monarch, from Havre.

Williams and A. H. Plummer held a fine meeting at Santa Fe, Miami county, where a log cabin was erected. Hon. Warren G. Sayre had a splendid meeting at Disko.

Cabin Dedicated at Cicero. Special to the Indianapolis Journal.

CICERO, Aug. 25.-The O. P. Morton Club and Republicans of the county held a "house-warming" and dedication of their log-cabin to-night Hon. A. J. Beveridge, of Indianapolis, delivered a stirring address, full of convincing argument, on the political issues of the hour, which was enthusiastically received, and did much good. The cabin was crowded with at least 600 or 700 people. More than that number could not get even to the doors or windows. Many Democrats were attentive listeners to the speeches. The cabin is in the form of a Y, each L containing twenty square feet. A liberty-pole, sur-mounted by a beautiful starry banner, rises above it. Many old relics are hung upon the Political Scraps.

A successful meeting was held at Santa Fe, Miami county, Saturday afternoon and evening, the object being the erection of a log cabin and formation of a Lincoln League club with a large membership. Addresses were made by Ethan T. Reasoner, of Peru, and B. F. Will iams, of Wabash.

Thirty Tippecance and Tyler voters met at the opera-house at Elkhart on Saturday and organized a Harrison and Morton campaign club, with John Davenport as president; Joel Ellis vice-president, A. W. Dunbar, secretary, and Daniel Mitchell, treasurer. The club proposes to do some active campaign work this fall.

Hon, Robert Loveland, assisted by Dr. Ramsey and others, formed a Lincoln League club at California school-house, Miami county, with a membership of thirty. The meeting was a great success. This township (Erie) is one of the strongholds of the Democracy in that county. Mr. Loveland addressed the meeting. The Republicans in Arcadia and vicinity have organized a Lincoln League club. The officers are J. A. Houser, president; T. J. Bishop, vicepresident; L. E. Ballard, secretary; J. H. Gentry, treasurer; A. J. W. Lyons, door-keeper. There are fifty-three names on the roll, with a good prospect for one hundred or more. At the last meeting-Friday evening, the 24th inst .-Hon, Dick Stephenson and ex-Senator Graham, of Noblesville, were in attendance and expounded the gospel of Republicanism so plain and simple that even a Democrat need not err

PREPARING ANOTHER SENSATION.

The Country Likely To Be Treated to Further Surprises by the President.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal WASHINGTON, Aug. 26.-The President's message relating to the fisheries treaty and the prospective difficulty with Canada is not the only sensational proclamation that the people of Washington expect to see issued before the end of the impending campaign. Almost nightly, for six weeks, there has been at Oak View, when the President was at his country home, or the White House, when the chief executive was there located, consultations with the principal politicians of the Democratic party. William L. Scott, Calvin S. Brice, William H. Barnum, Senator Gorman, and other men of less character but more sensationalism have been keeping the dust flying on the road to Oak View, or the door open to the President's private room at the White House, and I am informed that they have been pouring into the chief executive's ear all kinds of prepositions intended to surprise the country and thwart the Republican managers. One of the principal efforts the administration will make between now and the middle of October will be to divert public attention from the real issues of the campaign. Reports continually come from New York to the effect that the foreign-born citizens are flocking almost solidly to the Republican party on ac count of the vaciliating foreign policy of the administration. The incident with Canada is not the real reason of unpopularity of Mr. Cleveland with men of foreign birth but American citizenship. The course of Minister Phelps, who is trying to keep pace with the dudes of London, has disgusted all true Americans. The imprisonment of several Irish-Americans in English dungeons, and the atrocities committed upon American citizens in France, Spain, and other foreign countries, during the last two years, coupled with the very feeble efforts made by Secretary Bayard "to get apologies," but not releases, have all contributed to thoroughly disgust every one who is proud of his citizenship. It is common for Americans who are familiar with the proceedings at the State Department to observe' when they take out passports to go abroad, that the document, which costs $5, is only good to identify the holder; that it affords no protection whatever, and that it is a failure. Then the tariff question is playing haves with the administration among the laboring men and mechanics in all States, especially in the East. It is stated that at least 50,000 labor votes have marched over in a body from the Democratic column to the Republican ranks in New York alone, and that the Mills bill has led this change. If the President could detract from these two features of the campaign, and attract attention to the feigned or affected vigorous foreign policy, he would feel more cheerful over the outlook. The Republicans in Congress are determined that he shall not receive assistance from them in his efforts to change his course. They propose to hold him to his record, and say that the future can only be judged by the past. No promise of protection to Americans abroad, of American fishermen, of American interests generally, will answer the purpose now. People can point back, only a few months, when the flag was outraged on foreign soil, and atrocities were committed against American citizens without even an effort being made to secure an explanation or Cleveland Contributes $10,000.

Special to tue Indianapolis Journal WASHINGTON, Aug. 26.-President Cleveland's fat $10,000 contribution to the national Democratic campaign fund occasions a good deal of pleasantry among Republicans here to-night. Ten thousand dollars, they say, is a considerable sum for a presidential candidate to hand in, and must indicate considerable anxiety about the result, especially in the Empire State. They wonder, too, why he should set this generous example, or even consider it necessary to contribute a sum greater, perhaps, than the combined contributions of all his Republican predesessors since Buchanan, if his fishery thunderbalt is to prove so effective in proselytizing Irish Republicans in New York State. On the other hand, Democrats say Cleveland is waking np and begins to realize the exigency of the po-litical condition, particularly in his home State.

EDMUNDS AND THE MESSAGE.

Senator Dissected That Document.

Washington Special in Philadelphia Press.

As soon as Senator Sherman, when the reading of the message was finished, moved its reference to the fereign affairs committee, Senator Edmunds slowly rose from his chair and with as soft and gentle an expression as he can put upon his face announced that he desired to say a word upon the motion. He spread out a few books and decuments in handy order upon his desk like a surgeon arranging his instruments for a demonstration in vivisection and begap. His voice was so low and quiet that at first it was difficult to hear him, and he never raised it loud enough to be heard outside the open decrways of the chamber. His manner was gentle, and he took up the subject with a touch as velvety as a cat's. The leader of the Senate rarely gesticulates or attempts to set off his speeches with graceful attitudes. He indulges as little in tricks of rhetoric. There was no more effort for display in his speech to-day than there is in the casual spanking of a baby by a practiced hand. He laid the message on his desk and went at it with logic as merciless as steel and as passionless. There was no speer on his lip to mark the fine scorn with which he expressed himself gratified tions of the President of the United States to

to learn of the "hopes, wishes, almost intenprotect American interests and American One by one, as he came to the interesting points in his demonstration, he took up the instruments he had arranged upon his desk. He took up the President's message transmitting the fisheries treaty and sawed through the backbone of its author's consistency by comparing is with the view assumed by this later document from the same hand. He took the retaliation actof eighteen months ago authorizing the President to do the very thing he now professes himself so anxious for authority to do in the event of Canadian outrages occurring, which he now declares have been occurring from time to time ever since that date, while he let this power lie idle in his hands. He laid across the rounded periods of the President's message which attempts to prove that Article 29, of the treaty of 1871, is abrogated the sharp edge of the recent letter of the Presi dent's Secretary of State which announces officially that the article in question is still in force He held up beside the message the treaty which came to the Senate from the same hand only a few months ago, and pointed out how completely the message acknowledged the truth of every charge that had been made against the treaty. In this merciless fashion Mr. Edmunds dissected the message from beginning to end, using the instruments furnished by the President and his Secretary of State, cutting all the sinews, touching every sensitive nerve and probing the very marrow, but through it all he maintained the calm, impassioned manner of an anatomist who has no thought of giving pain, but is concerned only to display the subject scientifically to his class. Still, it was a cruelly conrteous, affably ugly speech; and it was a relief when a baby in the gallery, with a head as bald as the Senator's own, set up a cry so loud and agonizing that he had to stop until it could be carried away. After Senator Edmunds's demonstration in vivisection, Senators Hoar, Frye and Hale participated in an interesting autopsy upon the remains.

Combining to Disregard the Law.

CLEVELAND, O., Aug. 26 .- Twenty-four saloon-keepers who kept open their places last Sunday, on the occasion of the meeting of the Kriegerbund, have been arrested during the past week for fiolating the State Sunday-closing law. At a meeting of saloon-keepers to-day it was decided to entirely disregard the law next Sunday, and a general meeting will be held on Friday next to arrange for carrying out that de-cision. The idea is to blockade the courts and render the police powerless to enforce the law.

MRS. STOWE'S FADING LIFE.

Her Declining Years Brightened by the Loving Attention of Her Children.

New York World. Capt. Lewis Corwin's farm is three miles north of Sag Harbor, and situated on an arm of Long island known as Hog Neck, but which latter-day dwellers find pleasanter to call North Haven. The dwelling is a two-story wooden structure, built without any attempt at style, but large and roomy. It is surrounded by 100 acres of meadow and grove-a quiet, secluded spot, where the glistening waters of Shelter Island sound laugh and dance through a vista of trembling leaves and waving grass.
It is here that Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, declining in health, is passing her time in the enjoyment of that repose and quiet which is deemed so essential in her present condition.

Two weeks ago, when the steamer Sunshine, from Hartford, arrived at the unpretentious dock at Sag Harbor, the crowd that waited its coming was unusually large. Some event was about to happen, for there was a marked degree of expectation on the faces of many who waited. Among the first passengers to land was au old lady whose hair was frosted as white as the foam blown among the pebbles on the beach. She walked slowly, leaning upon the arm of a bearded muscular-looking young man of about thirty. Two young women followed, and two comely colored female servants came after them. They were Stowes, mother and children. The young man was Rev. Charles Edward Stowe, pastor of the Windsor-avenue Congregational Church. Hartford, and the younger ladies were Misses Hattie and Eliza Stowe. The party entered a "bus" and were driven away, and the summer visitors and residents who welcomed them at the landing have not seen them since. Their isolation is a delightful one, however, and in the rest and calm it affords the distinguished invalid may be so benefited as to be spared for some time to come. The doctors say that at present her mind is in such a state that any consecutive thought is impossible. Time is no respecter of persons, whatever their achievements, and fearing the possibility that the lofty, grand mind was at last succumbing to the inexorable grasp of time, the change to the country was immediately advised.

And there she is with her children by her, in the calm afterglow of a life fruitful with achievement. She has lived long enough to see the humane idea which formed the one motive of her life and work an expanding reality. The years that have given the verdict have also possessed her with a serenity that looks undismayed at the gradual ebbing of life's day.

The visitor making the pilgrimage to the farm secures a conveyance at Sag Marbor, which rumbles over the little bridge spanning the cove to a well-kept road on the other side. Manufacturer Fay's handsome properties are passed, and the loquacious driver points out the estate of Chief-justice Daly, with its evenly-trimmed hedges. Then there is the place of the rich merchant, Aldrich. Very nice people live The road takes a slight turn to the left, and the calm waters of the cove again come into view, backed up by a line of wooded hills, which gradually shelves in white stretches of shingle. The driver declares it is a pretty view, and adds, philosophically, that pretty views have a money value in real estate matters. A little further on the road narrows and the wheels of the buggy sink deep into the yielding sand, compelling a slow walk. The way appears seldom to have been in use, and is shaded by closely growing trees and clambering vines, stretching forward in a green perspective, relieved by a profusion of simple wild flowers. It is tedious traveling, as the ground takes a rise. The sparrows chirp in the thicket, and the leaves quiver in a breath of wind that comes from the bay to make the mid-day heat endurable.

At last the driver points to the top of the rise and says that is the destination. The house is not visible in the thick grove of trees by which it is surrounded, and it is only after driving through the old gateway that it comes into view. There is an air of idyllic calm about the place. From its calm height it overlooks Shelter island channel and all the pretty inlets and coves made by the erratic inwanderings of the sea. At dusk Cedar island light gleams in the east like a prisoned planet.

There is a lively barking of dogs, as two aristocratic and well-fed pugs rush out to meet the visitor. They are "Punch" and "Missy," who at one time had the distinction of appearing in print as two of the first importations of their particular class. They are each about ten years old new, and are inclined to adiposity. Rev. Mr. Stowe appears at the door bowered by a grape arbor whose generous wealth has not yet taken the tinge of ripeness. He is attired in a "blazer" and Knickerbockers, and appears like a man who is enjoying a thorough relaxation. He greets the visitor cordially, and says: "Yes; we are here for perfect rest, as far as it can be secured. My mother does not care to be disturbed, and we deem it advisable to humor "We have an Acadia here whose serenity is undisturbed. There is little variety in our method of living each day, and that fact in itself lightful one, and mother seems to be perfectly contented here. She passes most of her time in the garden or sitting looking out upon the Waters." "We are in hopes," continued the young clergyman with a shade more of seriousness in his tone, "that her trouble is merely temporary and that she will return to Hartford in the fall is not to be deplored. We are here for quiet and have enjoyed it, so far. The place is a de-

Life at the Corwin farm is very simple. The mornings are generally fresh and bracing, but not until the sun has lifted the gossamer of miss from the fields and hedges do the boarders appear. After breakfast a short stroll is taken down the road, the delightful shade heavy with the scent of wild flowers and dreamy in the droning monotone of the bee. Flowers of bright gold, flaming red, the white plume of the myrtle and the ripe glint of clambering wild berries make a picture that clings to one with delightful

Back from the walk through the old gate, dismantled through neglect and hung over by arching bows. Inside the chickens peck and scratch in the grass industriously, and hardy Captain Corwin stops from his work for a minute to smile proudly on his guests. For the old seaman is proud of them, and their advent at the farm even pales in its importance his first whaling trip. He is a fairly well-read man and is full of hard, homely sense. One evening about twilight, as Mrs. Stowe was walking alone in the garden, as is her custom, she was approached by the Captain. He held his hat respectfully in his hand. "When I was younger," said he, "I read with s great deal of satisfaction and instruction 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.' The story impressed me very much, and I am happy to shake hands with you, Mrs. Stowe, who wrote it."

an inebriated I. O. U "I did not write it, replied the septuagenarian gently, as she shook his brawny hand. "You didn't!" ejaculated the Captain in amazement. "Why, who did then?"
"God wrote it," she replied, simply.
merely did his dictation." "Amen!" said Captain Corwin reverently, as he walked thoughtfully away.

The snowy-haired authoress delights to wander in the garden and orchards, but seldom speaks. She is always attended by one of her daughters, and any one who makes the journey up the Neck perhaps may see them sitting silently under the trees or walking together. Contrary to the belief general in such cases Mrs. Stowe does not care to have any one read to her, any species of mental exertion apparently being distasteful to her. Mrs. Stowe's life has been one of active intellectual work, and this sudden lapse must come with a certain shock to those near and dear to her, for it is at last sadly apparent that her mind is failing, and in just such a condition as Emerson's when he exhibited the first signs of mental decay. For this reason no callers are received at the farm, though several persons have driven over in the hope of seeing the distinguished old woman, but have invariably driven away disappointed. One day last week Mrs. Eliza Wales. ardent Bibliomaniac, drove over from South Hampton. She had made a collection of the first editions of the works of Mrs. Stowe and Henry Ward Beecher, and was very desirous of meeting the surviving author who had given her so much pleasure. Mrs. Wales, however, was doomed to the same difappointment that had met others before her, though this feeling was pleasantly lessened by the cordial reception given her by the Misses Stowe.

On Wednesday last the little colony of recluses drove to East Hampton, the home of Dr. Lyman Beecher, the father of Mrs. Stowe. In this quiet little village, ten miles distant, the fone brothers and sisters were bern. The places familiar to early childhood did not seem to awake the authoress to any reminiscent feeling. She was apathetic, and her only wish was to return to the quiet of the farm once more. The long drive fatigued her considerably, and its effect was plainly apparent when the return drive was at last ended.

She eats no solid food and subsists mainly on broth and beef tes. It is hoped that the stay by the sea will prove of sufficient benefit to permit a return to Hartford by the 1st of October. While the distinguished old woman in her seclusion strays among the flowers, in the village below colored lithographs advertise a grand revival of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." to take nis the 29th inst. The real truth is that Queen Natalie has been a useful instrument to Russia in the past, but now that her part is played, the Czar, following the usual custom of sovereigns and statesmen under such circumstances, has thrown her over, for he does not intend that King Milan's unpopularity shall be turned to the advantage of the Queen, who will find before long that she has been playing the game of the Prince of Montenegro, who will almost certainly be the next King of Servia. We may now hear any day of the fall of King Milan.

AMERICANS IN LONDON.

glish Sharper Who Did Up a Young Man from Mitwaukee.

New York Special.

The fisecing of the Americans abroad goes merrily on. The bait that always catches the man from the States is the heavy swell. It is not to be wondered at that the shrewdest of Americans are deceived by London and Parisian gamblers when one reflects that the most acute of native judges are easily taken in by them. recall an instance which serves to show how the London sharps work in the year of grace

I was standing in front of the Victoria Hotel one afternoon with the younger son of one of the richest men in Milwaukee, when a victoria drove up to allow a gentleman known as Edwardes Potter, Esq., to alight. I give his name because he is one of the best-known gamblers in London, though he poses as a howling swell. He is rather consumptive in appearance, but looks like an aristocrat from the toes up. His carriage was perfectly appointed, the horses easily worth $2,000, and both of the men on the box the perfection of good form. He wore white kid gloves with heavy black stitching. Aside from this be was perfectly dressed-a tall, languid man, with a drooping mustache, a single glass, and an air of un-deniable distinction. I had seen him about London a great deal. I learned that he frequented the hotels where Americans stopped, and that he was a gambler. Afterwards I had seen him at the Smith-Kilrain fight, so that when the son of one of the richest men in Milwaukee rushed forward and grasped his hand, I thought that something would come of it. He was a clever little chap—my friend from Mil-waukee—had spent a good many of his twenty-eight years of life in roaming about, and was very well known in New York.

"I suppose," I said, "that you know that that man is a professional gambier?" "Nonsense!" said the only son. "He's one of the best-known men-about-town in Londoncharming fellow in every way. He has just bought a new gig, and he's going to take me along to test the springs. Half an hour later Mr. Edwardes Potter whirled up to the door of the Victoria in a beautiful ash cart, with a chestnut cob, whose shiny coat was embellished by a white collar and a russet-leather harness. The pair went off to a pigeon shoot, and the only son came back in the "Lost twenty pun's," he said, foggily, as he went on his way to dinner. "An' your frien', Edwardes Potter, loaned it to me. That's th kin' of gambler he is. Good enough for me, I'll to catch you before you went out."

"Who'll be there?" I asked. "All friends of ours," he said. "We're just going to play 10 shillings limit." When we returned to the hotel at midnight supper was laid. There were four or five men, among them Edwardes Potter and a Man-Who-Spoiled-It-All. He was a sleek, suave and pallid-faced American gambler-the sort of a man whom the average American can spot at a glance. The only man knew in the crowd, an Irish leader, winked knowingly at me before the supper was finished. It was a very agreeable party, but not the sort that one would care to meet at a card table. Fortunately, the only son got three sheets in the wind and became helpless from wine before supper was finished, and this was the excuse for breaking up the party. We took him to his room, where his servant put him to bed, and then we went back, smoked a cigar with the gamblers, and retired for the night. We left Mr. Edwardes Potter and one of his English cronies in the smeking-room. Ten minutes later they ascended to third story of the hotel, though they did not live there, entered the room of the drowsy youngster from Milwaukee, rallied and oked with him for a while, got him to sit up in bed and match coins, and when they left, half an hour later, they had "won" $3,800 from him.

The following day there was a great stir about it. It is only fair to say that the manager of the hotel did all in his power to get the money back, but, failing in this, he cleared the smoking-room of as magnificent a collection of gamblers as London could show. He had not known before that they were there. Nevertheless, noticed that when I returned to London again, Mr. Edwardes Potter was still one of the most distinguished and apparently popular visitors to that and other hotels where Americans congregate. I was told, by a good English authority. that his business in fleecing Americans amounted to about $30,000 a year. There is no risk, either. They don't shoot in London.

Of this something over $600 was cash, the rest

Improvement of the Plow Iowa State Register.

For thousands of years mankind wascontent with the rudest implements in the shape of a plow. And it was about the only implement there was to prepare the soil for crops. Then mankind exerted its talent to improve the plow. and the work is going yet. But a new era has been inaugurated, and bold attempts are now being made to entirely supplant the plow. The disc harrow, and the "cutaway," the latter especially, is a bold attempt at superseding the plow. The hoe, which for thousands of years was the symbol of man's drudgery and servitude, has been entirely banished from all well-regulated fields. Are fifty years ago there was no more probability of disposition to do away with the hoe than there is now of superseding the plow. The harrow, and the improved shallow cultivator for corn, have ended man's servitude with the hoe. And other and improved implements for stirring the soil, crushing the clods, pulverizing and cultivating, are boldly bidding for public recognition and claiming to do the work easier, better and quicker than any pattern of the plow. And mind has just commenced its struggles to make more and better improvements, and no one need be astonished if the progress of a decade or two should relegate to the rear the old-fashioned plow to give place to more efficient implements for preparing the soil easier and better. In the progress of the future, cold fingers in gathering corn are to be forgotten. Corn is to be cut and shocked by machinery. And corn is to be threshed like other grains. The old single shovel-plow was once nearly the only implement to cultivate corn. But gradually the number of the shovels to the plow increased to two, four and six. And now the best corn cultivators have twelve or fourteen small sharp plows to each cultivator. And it is claimed that a still larger increase would be an improvement. But the fashion of this world is passing away. We have supplanted the implements of one hun-dred years ago, and they are now a burlesque for rudeness. And ours of the present are soon to share the same fate. Radishes will grow during the whole of the growing season. A late crop can be put in for winter use. This vegetable can be had in
